Historic House Being Razed

Springfield, Mo., Sep. 29.—A low one story log structure, now weatherboarded, is being razed in the business district to make room for a modern brick building. It was once regarded as a thing of beauty, for it was one of the first dwellings erected in Springfield, and counted, in the early days, among the finest homes in Southern Missouri.

The building was erected in 1845, within half a block of the square, and remained in its original place until the close of the war. In antebellum days it was the scene of many social gatherings and served during the occupancy of both Northern and Southern forces as headquarters for the officers and as a hospital.

In the brief lulls of the storm it was the scene of balls, and at different times the gallants who wore the blue and those who wore the gray tripped the light fantastic with the belles of Springfield.

It was in this house that General Early, the Confederate officer, who died soon after the battle of Wilson Creek, made his famous boast that "No damn Dutchman could kill him by shooting off his toe." General Early was being cared for in this house when he died.

The house was occupied for several years by the mother of Mrs. H. B. McDaniel, whose husband is president of the Union National Bank. He was a Colonel of Governor Folk's staff.

Just after they had crossed Buffalo creek the school house, Wright emerged from the brush stark naked, with a handkerchief tied over his face. He attacked Ethel and threw her on the ground. In the struggle she managed to jerk the handkerchief off Wright's face, and he hearing a number of men approaching who had been attracted by the screams of the girls, rushed into the bushes and on to his home, where was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Charles Nance, who brought him to Pineville yesterday and committed him to jail.
